

The Magical World of Musi

Anna Horzen, Creative Production Manager

Imagine a world where music and its creation is built into the very structure of society. What would it look like? What would it sound like? What kinds of opportunities would it present, for children in particular?

We want Earth to be that world, and to help make it happen, we've created MusiQuest! MusiQuest is set on a fictional planet quite similar to Earth. However, in addition to water, fire, earth, and air, Musi has a fundamental fifth element: music. Music is woven into the very fibers of Musi – plants are musical, water can sing songs, and polar bears can growl tunes. Music is a universal language that allows Musi's primary inhabitants, Noties, to communicate amongst themselves as well as with other living beings. It is not uncommon to stumble upon a Notie deep in conversation with a whale, or to walk past a swarm of bees buzzing about their new compositions.

The Noties and animals of Musi (or “musizens” for short) could not be friendlier folk! They thrive on music making, creativity, and curiosity, and are ideal learning companions. From a humorous professor who is obsessed with Earthen transportation to a wilderness explorer who looks to the clouds for musical inspiration, there are Noties prepared to embark on a diverse discovery of musical topics with students. Sometimes Noties serve as knowledge facilitators, and sometimes they study a new concept right alongside the student. Regardless, Noties model positive relationships with music and use it as a vehicle of expression and creativity on a daily basis.

We’ve made the effort to build Musi to present an idealized world where music education is accessible to people of all ages, from all different backgrounds. There are no barriers to entry or preconceptions about music in Musi, so Noties can pursue music as a career, or find ways to incorporate it into their life as a student, barista, or doctor. Regardless of what Noties – and humans – choose to do with their musical knowledge and abilities, music is always available to them on Musi to enjoy and express themselves!

Our dream is that, over time, Earth will become more like Musi, and that MusiQuest will contribute to this worldwide transformation of musical access and creativity. That includes your students learning and exploring alongside Noties and discovering positive models of musical expression and curiosity. So, what are you waiting for? Come visit the World of Musi and join the musical adventure!
